MONEY FLEW IN A CAT FIGHT. A gaunt hobo cat found his way Wed nesday afternoon into the bank of Louis Scharlach & Company at 362 Grand street and caused more excitement around there for a while than there has been on the lower East Side since election night. The cat got into the office unnoticed by the clerks some time in the afternoon and went to sleep under the safe. He remained there in peaceful security until the well-fed office cat began to suspect the presence of an intruder and went on a tour of investiga-

Several Hebrew depositors were in the office, and stacks of American and oreign money in coin and bills were piled on the desks as the clerks count ed the day's deposit when there was a disturbance in the rear of the room where the sale is. Isaac, the office cat had lo ated the hobo and was trying In all its stages thereshould be cleanlanguage cats can command and the fur on Isaac's back was standing straight

Max Lubiner, one of the clerks thinking be knew better than I-asc how to get the cat out, reached his band under the safe. The hobo promptly dug his claws in and Lubiner nowled and drew his hand out quickly. Then the clerks got walking sticks and prodded the hobo. He rushed out, and as he appeared Isaac made a spring for him. The next minute there was the wildest kind of a time in the bank. The cats jumped upon the desks and fought there, scattering the piles of money on

"Lock the door! Lock the door!" shrieked Lubiner. This command wrought up the bewhiskered depositors present, but the clerks were busy chasing the cats, and fire shovels, umorellas and brooms were brought into requisition. The hobo cat eluded them and there was no restraining I-asc who was almost twice the size of the hobo cat and seemed aware that when they clinched it would be a onesided battle. The cats scampered over the desks and the wide open money drawers and gold and silver rolled over ne floor, the depositors outside the rail watching it with bated breath. None rolled outside, however, and some of the clerks quit pursuing the

The hobo finally sought refuge in the show window in which were spread out alis of all denominations. Isaac folowed and cornered his enemy who prepared to make a last stand. They linched and there was a first class cat fight on the bed of greenb cks. The ests rolled over and over and the bills flew like feathers in a gale. A crowd gathered outside and howling with de-light waited for the window glass to

The hobo cat finally managed to tear bimself away from Isaac's embrace. As he hustled for the rear window which had been left open for him there was a cry of alarm. The clerks acticed nat several bills were fastened in his caws and were going for him. The cat reached the yard before he could be stopped, but he was unable to go arther because the yard is surrounded by high walls. The clerks ran at him with sticks and he sought refuge in an empty barrel. There he was captured. A cloth was thrown around him and by diplomatic manoevring the bills were snatched away. Then he was thrown out by the front door. During the rumpus in the back yard the crowd outside had increased and a rumor went around that thieves were trying to rob the bank and were strug gling with the clerks in the back yard Somebody fetched Policeman Whitman and he pounded on the locked bank door. It was opened when the cat was thrown out.

"Where's the thieves?" demanded Whitman, pulling his club.
"There he goes," replied the clerks, pointing to the cat which was making tracks toward the Bowery.

"Hell!" said Whitman, and he busied himself in driving the crowd away. The clerks had to work overtime getting the money together again and counting it. They said, however, that none of it had got away. Trust those who have tried.
